- ✓ Appropriate tuition fees to be paid as stated on initial offer letter along with any other deposit requirement for accommodation, Travel/Medical Insurance etc

INDUSTRY ENTRY REQUIREMENTS:

Generally a degree or postgraduate qualification is not required for entry into work as a cabin crew member. Instead, most airlines require a good secondary education with proficiency in English and Maths. Studying a degree, HND or foundation degree in one of the following subjects may be useful in showing the airline that you have an interest in this area:

- Hospitality Management
- Languages
- Leisure and Tourism Management
- Travel
- Customer Service

Being able to speak other languages may be particularly useful and this could put you at an advantage against other candidates. The majority of airlines have a list of requirements for selection of Cabin Crew and this includes candidates demonstrating a genuine interest in pursuing a career in cabin Crew along with the following:

- Minimum age of 18, in some cases 21
- Good standard of health and fitness
- Minimum height requirement of 5ft 1 inch up to maximum of 6ft 1 (this may differ depending on airlines) in the UK it is often measured as reach rather than height
- Good hearing and eyesight, although glasses and contact lenses are allowed
- Valid passport
- Clean record
- Medical examination (some airlines may not require this)

CAREER PROSPECTS

Recruitment is at an all time high within this industry and airlines are constantly looking for crew members to join their team. This is a highly-competitive profession with high earning potential and candidates compete for jobs, including new entrants to those with a significant amount of relevant experience. Airlines recruit throughout the year and it is important to make applications to a number of airlines.

After building up your experience as a crew member, there will usually be an option to either apply for promotion as an on board manager or there could be an invite from the airline for other senior positions depending on your track record, previous qualifications and abilities. Promotion for air cabin crew is based on experience and performance.

Each airline provides its own structured training programme for new entrants and invests in the professional development of its crew members. It typically lasts between four to seven weeks and the primary focus of the training is passenger safety, including the aircraft's safety equipment and emergency procedures, security and first aid.

PAY SCALE

Basic starting salaries for air cabin crew vary depending on the country, airline and factors such as experience, grade, domestic or international flights, long haul or short haul flights etc. Additional allowances and incentives may be received on top of the basic salary. Air cabin crew with experience can expect high earning potential.

For example, the starting earning potential for cabin crew can be in the region of over 1000 US dollars per month, reaching up to 5,000 US dollars per month for senior members along with various perks. Some airlines will offer additional allowances on top of base pay for the number of languages spoken. Many airlines also offer overnight payments for nights spent away from home. The majority of airlines offer free flights to cabin crew on domestic flights and some offer free or heavily discounted international flights. There is usually a policy for discounted travel for immediate family and spouses.

Income figures are intended as a guide only.
